"Rosebud ..."

And with that muttered word, the classic movie Citizen Kane opens. As publisher Charles Foster Kane (Orson Welles) breathes his last, a snow globe falls from his hand and smashes on the floor. Do those shattered pieces represent Kane's shattered life (which we'll soon learn all about)? Well maybe.

A musical snow globe released to commemorate the 75th annual Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade. The song played? 76 Trombones, of course!

From Department 56: a Snowbaby and his new pal, Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer.

Most globes, fortunately, lead a happier existence. Glass (and later, plastic) fluid-filled snow globes (a.k.a. waterglobes, waterballs, snowdomes, snowscenes, snow shakers, or blizzard-weights), with their picturesque interior scenes and all those swirling flakes, have been delighting us for nearly 150 years.

The first documented appearance of a snow globe was at the Paris Universal Expo of 1878. According to the published Expo report, "French exhibitors of decorated glass exhibited paperweights of hollow balls filled with water and a white powder which, when the paperweight particles, was shaken. Inspired, Perzy said "auf Wiedersehen" to the operating room, and set up shop as a still-inoperation-today snow globe manufacturer. His first globe: an image of the Basilica of the Birth of the Virgin Mary. (By the way that Citizen Kane globe, with its soon-to-bedemolished log cabin, was a Perzy.)

Collectors in Victorian England loved snow globes, but America had to make do with expensive imports until 1927. That's when Joseph Garaja of Pittsburgh was granted a domestic patent for his innovation: snow globes assembled underwater. This is turned upside down, falls in imitation of a snowstorm. "The first of those globes depicted a man with an umbrella, attempting, rather futilely, to protect himself against the snowy onslaught. Snow globes made their next Paris Expo appearance in 1889. Those globes, created by an unidentified souvenir seller, contained an image of the brand-new Eiffel Tower.

The demand for snow globes snowballed, and other European companies joined the fray. It wasn't until 1900, however, that the first globe patent was issued, to Erwin Perzy of Vienna. A developer of surgical equipment, Perzy's original goal was to come up with better reflective material for his "Schusterkugel," a flask filled with water, used to focus light during surgery. A snow-like effect occurred when the flask, filled with fluid and the new reflective ensured that the globes were completely filled with a tight seal, and also meant that the globes could now be mass-produced at much more affordable prices. Garaja's first globe starred a fish floating in seagrass.

By the 1930s, William Snyder's Atlas Crystal Works, in New Jersey, had become another major player in U.S. globe production. But it wasn't until snow globes made their feature film debut that crowds began clamoring for them. In 1940s Kitty Foyle, Ginger Rogers, as "Kitty," shook a globe that held the figure of a young girl on a sled, leading to a flashback scene. Ginger won an Oscar for her role. As for snow globes, their sales zoomed by 200 percent following Kitty Foyle's premiere.

Citizen Kane hit the screens the next year, and once "Kane's" snow globe hit the floor, globe sales continued to surge. Manufacturers in the United States and abroad were soon snowed under with orders, and domestic production, particularly of globes with patriotic themes, boomed during World War II, due to the loss of overseas imports.

But the recipe for what exactly went into a snow globe remained a closely guarded secret. globes were water-filled, an eventual blend of water and glycerin or glycol helped the flakes make a lazy descent. Even better, the antifreeze-like mix kept the fluid from turning into a soon-to-shatter iceball. (A warning: rest of us.)

The object, of course: to keep the snow whirling about for as long as possible before sinking to the bottom. While the original ingesting that fluid mix can be deadly to cats and dogs, and not particularly pleasant for the years a variety of other substances have also been tried: bone chips, porcelain bits, sand, sawdust, ground rice, and even soap flakes (presumably non-dissolvable). Some flakes were suited to a snow globe's theme: tiny blue foil bats for a Halloween globe, and gold glitter for one starring Liberace.

Even the unlikeliest vacation

While frosty figural themes, from jolly Santas to top-hatted snowmen, are a snow globe staple, much more has been captured within them. Snow globes celebrating scenic attractions and vacation destinations have remained tourist favorites since the 1940s, whether showing Niagara Falls (where it snows), or Bermuda (where it doesn't). There are globes geared to such pop culture favorites as Batman, Mickey Mouse, and Davy Crockett. Looking for a snow globe for your favorite golfer? One for Valentine's Day? A snowy salute to the Last Supper? You'll find them all, somewhere amongst the 71,000-plus globes listed daily on eBay. You'll even run across the occasional gotta-have-this advertising oddity, popular in the 1940s and 50s. Among the favorites: a snow globe promoting "Crown Termite Control" (featuring an interior crown, naturally), and one with a suspended faucet, labeled: "turn off excess secretion of gastric acid with Nacton." And, your day will be brightened considerably if you encounter a globe with a mass-produced foul-up: a bald bathing beauty, for instance ... an upside-down Abraham Lincoln

No snow for this Boston crustacean. When shaken, his globe fills with blue confetti.

Today's snow globes take many forms. There are globes that allow the proud possessor to insert a personal photo inside without soaking it. There are flat-bottomed plastic ovals, reportedly inspired by the view out the back window of a Volkswagen "Beetle," and unfortunately prone to evaporation and cloudy liquid. There are "mechanicals" which light up or incorporate music boxes. Some globes even swoosh the snow around at the touch of a button, so there's a whole lotta shakin' goin' on without involving much personal effort. There are even figures built around snow globes, such as Santa displaying a toy shop globe in

And then there are those huge outdoor inflatable snow globes. Each transparent vinyl globe has a blower in the base. Air from the blower sends polystyrene pellets up through a tube, to the top of the globe interior. There, they are blown out, cascading down and around the globe's nylon fabric characters as interior lights illuminate the action. Static cling or humidity can sometimes result in the pellets sticking to the vinyl, and the majority of inflatable globes lose any of their claims to attractiveness when deflated.

And then there are the snow globe songs. Some state the obvious:

Oh this season is surely special, everyone is glancing my way. I sure do look fine but if you got the time I need one favor from you today:

Please get me out of this snow globe! I'm tired of being on display! I'm stuck in this position! I wear the same thing every day!

Just get me out of this snow globe! I wanna sleep in a nice proper bed. Whatever you do, don't shake me Cuz' it really really really really really really hurts my head!

And there is a whole passel more. When it comes to romanticizing snow globes, the drifts are piled high.

Today, most vintage snow globes remain extremely affordable: under $15 for plastic, and under $50 for glass. (For imports, Disney globes, handcrafted globes, and globes used as a medium by contemporary artists, plan on adding plenty more.) So the next time you're snowed in, check out some of those 71,000 eBay listings. Like Charles Foster Kane, the dreamy allure of snow globes may transport you back to your childhood. Just don't drop one. Oh, and don't drink the water.

DEPARTMENT 56

"One Christmas evening, a group of friends set off to enjoy a dinner of celebration at a small country inn nestled in a quiet river town. As they rounded a bend in the road, they saw the small, old-fashioned village decorated for the holidays. The lights, like fairies, glowed and sparkled amid the freshly fallen snow. All evening, the conversation was full of Christmas memories and the visions the tiny town had evoked. Amidst the jovial banter and magical memories, the idea for a lighted Christmas village was born. That spark of an idea became a reality when, in 1976, Department 56 introduced a series of six hand-painted, ceramic buildings. The rest is history."

DECORATING FOR THE HOLIDAYS

In households across the country, Thanksgiving weekend marks the start of the winter holiday season. It is a time when holiday ornaments and decorations come out from their hiding places to be carefully unpacked and set up.

So much of what we put on display during the holidays is nostalgia; items handed down through the generations, gifts from friends and loved ones, and the new traditions we started more recently and add to over the years. Department 56, with its hundreds of new releases and retired villages, buildings, and accessories, is one such tradition that has been building old-fashioned decked-for-the-holidays townscapes in homes across the country for almost 50 years!

Collectors say part of the lure of collecting Department 56 is finding the space and generating the creativity to showcase their recreated Christmas villages in all their glory.

A BUSINESS IN BLOOM

Department 56, a U.S. manufacturer of holiday collectibles, ornaments, and giftware, was founded in 1976 as part of Bachman's, a retail florist based in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Bachman's has been in business since 1885, when founder Henry Bachman, Sr., planted potatoes, lettuce, onions, and squash on a plot of land in south Minneapolis that today houses the firm's headquarters. From 1885 to 1914, Bachman's raised vegetables, until Albert Bachman, one of Henry's five sons, made the now far-reaching decision to grow flowers rather than vegetables in one of the greenhouses.

flourished, it continued to grow in other, new directions, as well.

The story has it that in 1976, one of Bachman's employees, Edward Rudy "Ed" Bazinet, convinced the Bachman family to invest $50,000 in starting a new giftware division. In keeping with Bachman's numbering system used to identify each of its departments, this new wholesale gift imports division was assigned the number 56.

Under Bazinet's supervision, Department 56 villages grew in size, type, and popularity. When Department 56 was spun off as a $15 million subsidiary in 1984, Bazinet was appointed its first president and remained in company leadership positions until his retirement in 1997.

Bazinet died on November 20, 2017, leaving a $54 million estate.

Nearly 50 years after its founding, Department 56, now owned by Enesco, LLC and based in Eden Prairie, Minnesota, continues to nurture and grow four core Christmas village collections along with a handful of Halloween villages and a dozen or so licensed product lines. Bachman's is still a family-owned business focused on floral, home & garden products and services.

BUILDING A COLLECTIBLE VILLAGE

According to The Village Chronicler, a collectormanaged website that chronicles the company's history with a vast archival library regarding the Villages, giftware, and countless other items released by the company over its almost 50-year history, Department 56 launched its first village product line, The Original Snow Village®, in 1976 with six charming, lighted, ceramic buildings: Mountain Lodge, Gabled Cottage, the Inn, Country Church, Steepled Church, and Small Chalet. Although popular, it did not become a collectible until 1979, when Department 56 retired this first group of buildings, offered between 1976-77, to make room for 12 new additions in the line, unintentionally turning these retired items and subsequent releases into collectibles.

Through the years, the buildings in The Original Snow Village became more detailed, refined, and collectible. New attachments, accessories, and people became commonplace add-ons, and companies such as McDonald's, Hershey's, Starbucks, Coca-Cola, and the Campbell Soup Company sought licenses to have their businesses incorporated into the Village.

The overwhelming success of The Original Snow Village Collection led to the development and introduction of The Heritage Village Collection in 1984. This collection of lit houses featured a smaller scale of architecture and a non-glazed porcelain finish, which provided for smaller accessories and greater detail.

First out of the kiln in this new collection was the Dickens' Village Series. Reminiscent of Victorian England during the life and times of the famed British author, Charles Dickens, the Village launched with seven little proprietary shops and a church and would grow to include buildings significant to Dickens and referenced in such books as Nicholas Nickelby, The Old Curiosity Shop, David Copperfield, and the holiday classic, A Christmas Carol.

As with the Original Snow Village Collection, the collecting fury began after the retirement of the original set of Dickens' Village buildings. Following the retirement of the little-known, hand-numbered, limited-edition set, titled

The Village Mill, interest intensified, and a new collectible was born. This was the first Department 56 village to offer a hand-numbered, limited-edition building. Since then, Department 56 has released more limited editions and limited to the year of production pieces into this second most collected series than any others since. It also includes the first offered hand-numbered limited-edition accessory.

With the incredible following of the Snow Village and Dickens' Village series under its belt, Department 56 began to focus on the development of two new extensions of The Heritage Village Collection.

In 1986, both the New England Village Series and Alpine Village Series were introduced. New England Village depicts life in the American northeast during the early 1900s. The Alpine Village Series designed to be reminiscent of life in the Alps and countryside of Austria and Switzerland, would later grow to incorporate licensed pieces associated with the musical The Sound of Music. Both feature their own hand-numbered limitededition pieces, which adds to their appeal among collectors.

Over the next three plus decades, Department 56 has focused on annual releases, accessories, village expansion add-ons, licensing agreements, limited edition releases, retirements, and new village scenes as proven strategies for growing its business and keeping fans and collectors engaged. These strategies have also led to a strong secondary market among retailers and collectors. Although not as high in value as it has been in the past, retired, limited-release, and numbered pieces continue to be highly sought after by collectors and can be found on numerous websites in addition to Department 56's online e-commerce site.

As the brand reaches the half-century mark, product releases, including houses and accessories, were introduced, ranging in price from a high of $325 (Walt Disney World Haunted Mansion) to a range of accessories that can be purchased for under $50. An annual Village Catalog of new releases, fun for fans and collectors, can be purchased on the Department 56 website.

The popularity of Department 56 over the years naturally extended itself to building online communities on Facebook and other collector sites and social clubs where fans and collectors can share knowledge, display their village scenes, and buy and sell items. NCC stands for "National Council of 56 Clubs" and was founded in 1992 to serve as an umbrella organization for Department 56 Collector Clubs in the United States and Canada. Its site, https://www.ncc56.com, lists upcoming events, a Club Locator, and Tips & Ideas for collectors. The group also has a private Facebook page where those who love Department 56 villages and collecting them can join to receive inspiration, and guidance, and share their creations and ideas.

Another great online resource is The Village Chronicler. This site was founded by a passionate collector with a lifelong professional and personal connection with many key players including the late founder Ed Bazinet, key retailers, and artists among others. This free, invaluable resource provides history lists of items in each collection, linkage of all accessories to their respective buildings, product pictures, and much more.

BUILDING A VILLAGE OF YOUR OWN

Want to know more about collecting Department 56 products? You might want to first explore the many Villages introduced over the decades to find a theme that suits your personal style and interests. A good place to start for an overview of the Department 56 Village Series is: https://department56.com/pages/start-collecting

This site also includes "Handy Items to Have When Setting Up Your Display," such as an AC/DC adapter to power accessories that use a battery box; Tacky Wax to secure standing figurines and accessories such as streetlights and trees; and Village Snow to provide a realistic look to your village scene and help hide cords.

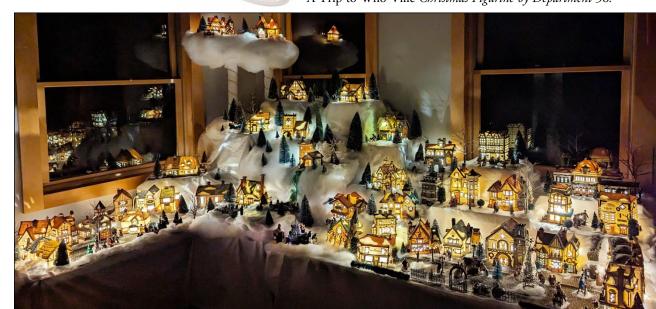

While online sites such as eBay, Etsy, and Department 56 online retailers are great sources for both new and pre-owned items, collectors say thrift stores and flea markets can offer surprising finds. The best way to authenticate? Each Department 56 item has its name on the bottom. Buildings are also dated with the year of copyright rather than the year of issue.

Local collector clubs and the social gatherings they sponsor are also great ways to get inspiration and guidance and connect with other fans. According to the National Council of 56 Clubs (NCC), "There are 70 Department 56 clubs nationwide with active and engaging members of all ages and from all walks of life." For a list of a club near you, visit https://ncc56.com

Need a little more, less personal form of inspiration? Watch any number of the YouTube videos you'll find when you search "Department 56." Collectors are more than happy to show you how they set up their villages and give you an armchair tour of their finished displays.

While selecting a village and then trying to find all the houses, items, and accessories in that collection is one way to go, the real fun and creativity, say collectors, is in mixing and matching pieces that appeal to you to create a traditional holiday display that is uniquely your own.

A Trip to Who-Ville Christmas Figurine by Department 56.

Department 56's Dickens Village all lit up in its own room.

This website offers a treasure trove of information on the White House Christmas Cards and how the presidents celebrated the Christmas season. Here, we have selected a few presidents and share the information on how many White House traditions came to be, and how history often played a role.

he White House Christmas traditions that Americans enjoy today have grown and changed over time from one Presidential administration to the next. As Christmas became a more celebrated holiday, activity at the President's residence reflected the focus on home, harmony, and peace.

White House Christmas cards have been officially sent out since 1953; however, Christmas cards were first offered for sale in America in 1875 and grew in popularity throughout the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

George Washington's crossing of the Delaware River, which occurred on the night of December 25-26, 1776, during the American Revolutionary War, was the first move in a complex and surprise military maneuver organized by George Washington, the commander-in-chief of the Continental Army, which culminated in their attack on Hessian forces garrisoned at Trenton.

George Washington (1789-1797)

George Washington was the nation's first president, and he set a high example for all future presidents to follow. President Washington was the only president who did not live in the White House. He was instrumental in selecting the design and location of the White House, but construction was not completed until after he left office.

President Washington and his wife, Martha, were very big entertainers at Christmas. Although Christmas cards were not used until the mid-19th Century, George and Martha sent many invitations during the eight Christmas seasons that George ran the United States, and they were often joined by relatives, friends, and many prominent people of the time. Washington was considered a fair man and would give his slaves and servants a good Christmas holiday. The only people who did not have days off for Christmas were the house servants.

The Washingtons spent lavishly; they loved music, dance, and festive occasions and would send hand-written invitations to friends and family to celebrate the twelve days of Christmas. These were considered the "Christmas cards" of the 1800s.

Thomas Jefferson (1801-1809)

For most of our earlier presidents, there is very little documented information regarding Christmas celebrations or traditions they or their families may have practiced. However, whether it is because he was a prolific letter writer or that scholars have accumulated a wealth of information on his life from painstaking research, there is more information describing the Christmas celebrations of our third president.

One of the mantles at Monticello is decorated for the season in the style of Jefferson's time.

Christmas celebrations at the Jefferson White House were festive affairs where delicacies and local American foods were served. Since Jefferson was a widower, Dolley Madison served as the hostess in 1805 and Jefferson played the violin for the dancing children. His slaves were allowed a few days of holiday respite over Christmas. During that time, they were able to travel to visit friends and relatives. Those staying at Monticello would celebrate by eating fresh meat instead of the usual cornmeal and pork.

Franklin Pierce (1853-1857)

While Christmas Cards had still not been considered part of the norm for the White House holiday season, Pierce did have a Christmas tree put up within its walls. Pierce is widely hailed as having the first White House tree, but it would not be until 1923 when President Calvin Coolidge lit up the first "National Christmas Tree" on the White House lawn.

Franklin Pierce, aka The President Who Loved Christmas.

Pierce had the Christmas tree decorated in 1856 for a group of Washington D.C. Sunday School children. The practice of putting up a Christmas tree was brought to the United States by German immigrants and was in vogue during the mid-1800s. Prior to this, decorations consisted of holly and pinecones and sprigs of green. The White House was much more festive for this Christmas celebration, and carolers sang Hark! the Herald Angels Sing to the children.

It was the Pierce White House that served as the inspiration for the first White House ornament created in 1997. The ornament depicts the White House lawn with people strolling on the grounds in a casual fashion. This peaceful scene demonstrated the only time during the Pierce administration which was calm and celebratory, as the Civil War was on its way.

This engraving, The Union Christmas Dinner, is from the Dec. 31, 1864, issue of Harper's Weekly, pictures President Abraham Lincoln inviting Confederates to join him, his cabinet, and other officials at the dinner table. The empty chairs represent places reserved for them. Upon the wall across from the chairs are written various statements regarding preservation, peace, and the end of slavery.

Abraham Lincoln (1861-1865)

December 25 was considered a normal workday. Years before his presidency, when Lincoln was a legislator in Illinois in 1834, there was a special vote taken to decide whether elected officials should be allowed to take Christmas Day off. Lincoln voted no, as he felt he would be wasting the taxpayer's money if he did so.

During his presidency, Lincoln had one Christmas filled with his entire family after a morning filled with an important Cabinet meeting. White House Christmases after this first one were relatively sad occasions due to the death of Lincoln's son, Willie, in February the following year. The Lincolns made it a point to spend future holidays visiting hospitals and lifting the spirits of those who served and were suffering. Son Tad Lincoln was so deeply moved that President Lincoln arranged to have Christmas gifts, such as reading material and sanitary clothes, sent to the soldiers under the signature, "From Tad Lincoln."

Recent estimates regarding the age of the tree consider it to be about 1,650 years old.

President Lincoln started quite a few soon-to-be-considered "traditions" during his tenure. His son Tad begged his father not to kill a certain turkey (named Jack) for Christmas and Lincoln wrote an official pardon saving the turkey's life. In 1863, Lincoln officially proclaimed that the last Thursday in November be considered a day of Thanksgiving. Prior to this proclamation, Thanksgiving was a regional holiday in New England and had been celebrated only sporadically. Congress passed a resolution to this effect but not until 1941.

Ulysses S. Grant (1869-1877)

To say that the Christmas holiday as we know it may not have existed if not for President Grant could be considered a truth. During his first presidential term in 1870, the formal General in Chief of the Union Army signed into law the bill that had been introduced by Illinois Congressman Burton Chauncey Cook, making Christmas a legal holiday. The bill also declared that New Year's Day, the 4th of July, and Thanksgiving Day would also be national holidays.

Another significant Christmas-related event involving Grant was the name in 1867 of a giant sequoia tree as the General Grant Tree (this took place two years after the end of the Civil War and two years before Grant was elected president). Today, this approximately 2,000-year-old tree measures about 270 feet high, 40 feet across at its base, with a circumference of 108 feet. In 1926, President Coolidge proclaimed the huge sequoia the "Nation's Christmas Tree."

Grover Cleveland (1885-1889 and 1893-1897)

Even though Christmas Cards were becoming popular once they were first offered for sale in 1886, it is blurry at best as to whether this two-term President ever sent them out. Grover Cleveland entered the White House as a bachelor and married the daughter of his former law partner, Miss Frances Folsom, one year later. This modern, young (fresh out of college at 21) First Lady helped turn the page for more festive Christmas celebrations held at the White House.

President and Mrs. Cleveland spent their first Christmas together at their farm called "Red Top" (as the President called his wife) with her mother. The Washington Post reported that the First Lady had the house decorated with English holly and evergreens, and "in one of the rooms a pretty Christmas tree." The new Mrs. Cleveland had been seen downtown, prior to Christmas, shopping in the crowded shops and she "gently elbowed her way through, and had a pleasant word for the tired shop girls." Mrs. Cleveland joined a local club and they provided a Christmas banquet for the poor children of Washington. It was she who set a tradition of good works to be done by the First Lady at holiday time. Cleveland once wrote of his wife, "I have in her something better than the Presidency for life."

In 1895, when their first child, Ruth, was just one (the Clevelands had five children altogether), a Christmas tree was erected and decorated with gold angels, gold and silver sleds, lots of tinsel, and the very first electric lights to be put on a Christmas tree in the White House. The multi-colored lights replaced candles for the first time.

Electric lights soon became popular when people heard that they were used in the White House. Under the tree were dolls, a doll house, and a miniature White House.

A Christmas Message to the American People from Calvin Coolidge

To the American People:
Christmas is not a time or a season, but a state of mind. To cherish peace and good will, to be plenteous in mercy, is to have the real spirit of Christmas. If we think on these things, there will be born in us a Savior and over us will shine a star sending its gleam of hope to the world.

- Calvin Coolidge

Calvin Coolidge (1923-1929)

As the 30th President of the United States, Calvin Coolidge was the first to truly extend a White House Christmas celebration to the American people. During his first Christmas in the White House in 1923, he initiated the tradition of the National Community Christmas Tree. A 48-foot Balsam Fir from his native state of Vermont was erected on The Ellipse, and an electric button enabled the President to light the tree on demand for the first-ever National Community Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony.

During the summer of 1924, Coolidge's youngest son, Calvin, Jr., died of staphylococcus septicemia (better known as blood poisoning), an event that was said to have changed "Silent Cal" forever. That same year, the White House received a record-setting 12,000 Christmas cards from the American public.

Coolidge was known for his stoic and serious demeanor. But in 1926, after receiving so many heartfelt gifts and Christmas cards from the American people, Coolidge was so emotionally affected that he gave a gift of a gold coin to all of the White House officials and staff members.

President Coolidge and his wife were known to send Christmas cards to close friends and family. But in 1927, when Coolidge was again being bombarded with requests to share a Christmas message with the public, he finally agreed. On Christmas morning, a short, handwritten message from the President appeared in every major newspaper, making this the first Christmas greeting to be given to the American public from a president.

Dwight D. Eisenhower (1953-1961)

As General of the United States Army and Supreme Allied Commander during World War II, Dwight D. Eisenhower easily became a well-liked man on domestic soil. "I Like Ike" helped Eisenhower win the presidency by a landslide to become the 34th President of the United States of America.

During his first Christmas in the White House in 1953, Eisenhower referred to Hallmark President Joyce C. Hall for help with his first official Christmas cards as the President. An artist himself, Eisenhower painted a portrait of Abraham Lincoln while waiting for news on a Korean armistice. The portrait was based on an 1863 portrait of Lincoln by President Dwight D. Eisenhower feeds a cranberry to a turkey he received from the Turkey Foundation on November 4, 1954, at the White House.

Alexander Gardner. With this, Eisenhower ordered 1,100 white keepsake folders from Hallmark, each containing a reproduction of his Lincoln portrait. All of the folders were embossed with the official Presidential Seal along with the words "Season's Greetings" in gold. "The President and Mrs. Eisenhower extend their best wishes for Christmas and the New Year" was engraved in black on the inside of each card.

Hallmark also produced 500 informal Christmas cards for the President and First Lady to send to their close and personal friends. The design of the informal cards contained an embossment of holly leaves and red berries; "Mamie and Ike" was engraved on the inside in the First Lady's handwriting.

Before lighting his first National Community Christmas Tree for over 4,000 onlookers, Eisenhower gave the President's annual Christmas speech from inside the White House via radio and television, and it was transmitted around the world by Voice of America radio in over 30 languages.

The Lincoln portrait was so popular that Eisenhower painted George Washington and the prints were given as a Christmas gift in 1954. This was painted during a fishing trip to Colorado. This year, he ordered 1,300 official White House Christmas Cards.

St. Louis Creek Byers Peak Ranch was painted by President Eisenhower depicting one of his favorite fishing holes. While painting this landscape, he suffered a heart attack but did go on to complete the piece while recovering at the hospital.

Then, in 1955, Eisenhower painted a landscape but suffered a heart attack without finishing the painting titled St. Louis Creek, Byers Peak

For the first Christmas gift in 1961, First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy chose a photograph of little Caroline Kennedy's ducks in the fountain on the South Lawn with the White House in the background. The President's personal photographer, Cecil Stoughton, snapped the picture of the ducks in the fountain.

Ranch. He did complete the painting while recovering at the hospital.

Eisenhower's tradition of creating a painting and sending cards with the image at Christmastime continued throughout his tenure as President, and Hallmark continued to provide Christmas cards to the White House each year.

John F. Kennedy (1961-1963)

For the Kennedy's first Christmas in the White House in 1961, as a Christmas gift to their staff, they gave a photograph of little Caroline Kennedy's ducks in the fountain on the South Lawn with the White House in the background. Caroline, only five years old at the time, had raised the ducks since they were ducklings. Eventually, the ducks were relocated to Rock Creek Park in northwest D.C.

Hallmark was still producing Christmas Nutcracker Sugreetings for the White House. Hallmark reproduced 1,000 color gift prints that were given to White House staff members at an informal reception.

The official White House Christmas Cards featured a wide green silk-screened banner on a smooth white stock accompanied by the official Presidential Seal and the sentiment "Season's Greetings 1961"

This rare print of the White House Green Room was reproduced from an original painting by Edward H. Lehman, and was given to White House staff as the Kennedy's 1964 Christmas presents. This copy is signed by both John F. Kennedy and Jacqueline Kennedy in 1963, saying "With our appreciation and best wishes for a happy Christmas."

engraved in gold. The inside read, "The President and Mrs. Kennedy wish you a Blessed Christmas and a Happy New Year." President Kennedy ordered 800 official Christmas cards from Hallmark. Additionally, since the President was sending Christmas cards to leaders around the world, he ordered another 100 cards with a general New Year's imprint that did not make any mention of Christmas.

The lighting of the National Christmas Tree was overseen by Vice President Johnson since the Kennedy family was with the family after patriarch Joseph Kennedy suffered a stroke. Johnson spoke of the nation's dedication to seeking world peace, comparing that dedication to Christ's quest for unity.

This "Camelot" family brought the American Public into the People's House thanks to its First Lady, Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy. Mrs. Kennedy's mission was to turn the White House into a showcase of American art and history. By early 1962, four rooms had been completed and restored back to their original grandeur with Jackie welcoming the nation and the media to witness and experience her grand-scale works. American artist Edward Lehman, best known for his advertising illustrations, was commissioned to paint a 20 x 30-inch water-color of the Red Room. The Kennedys were so impressed, that the image was reproduced and used as the White House 1962 Christmas gifts to the White House staff.

Jackie also created the White House Historical Association and gifted its published book The White House, An Historic Guide to members of the Cabinet and senior staff.

The official White House Christmas cards were also given a bit of a makeover when the Kennedys used a photograph depicting Mrs. Kennedy sitting with John Jr. in a one-horse open sleigh being led by Caroline's pony, Macaroni, on the cover.

On December 17 at 5:15 p.m., President Kennedy lit the National Community

Christmas tree at the Pageant of Peace. It was the only year he was present at the ceremony. With the Cuban Missile Crisis ensuing only two months prior, the President spoke of peace in his Christmas message to the American people. He expressed hope for peace "after a year with peace [had] been sorely tried."

Lehman was once again invited to paint watercolors of the newly remodeled Green Room and Blue Room. The Green Room was reproduced by Hallmark and 2,300 were distributed that year. Three hundred prints were retained by Hallmark, 200 of which were requested by the White House to have no personalized message and no folder.

Lehman returned to the White House to finish his watercolor of the Blue Room, which the President and Mrs. Kennedy were planning to use for the 1964 Christmas season as gifts to the staff. The painting was finished but never reproduced after the President's assassination on November 22, 1963.

Mrs. Kennedy did give the Green Room Christmas gift prints to members of the White House staff after the President's death, but the official White House Christmas cards of 1963 were never distributed. The design is a color photograph of the crèche in the East Room accompanied by a gold embossed Presidential Seal and the message "With our wishes for a Blessed Christmas and a Happy New Year." Only a few days before going to Dallas, the President and First Lady personally signed about 30 Christmas cards, which are perhaps the rarest Christmas cards of any President in modern times.

Ronald Reagan (1981-1989)

Over the course of eight years, the 40th President of the United States, Ronald Reagan, with his wife, Nancy, were on a mission when it came to designing their Christmas cards. The Reagans decided to send out White House Christmas cards that would share the "aura" of the White House at Christmastime. They wanted to encourage young artists, so they would have a different artist do a representation of the White House every year and use these for their official White House Christmas cards. This produced eight varied views of the White House "aura" in all its holiday regalia.

Each of the eight Christmas cards designed for the Reagans was centered on the architecture, atmosphere, and nature of the White House as a home for the President. The number of printed cards at the start of the Reagan Presidency began at 65,000 and rose to 125,000 over the course of his eight years in office. Selected artists were asked to submit samples of their work for consideration. Among those selected was Jamie Wyeth, whose grandfather N.C. Wyeth produced Christmas cards for the Nixon White House, James Steinmeyer, Mark Hampton, and Thomas William Jones, who did several cards.

Hundreds of volunteers were gathered to help with the processing of Christmas cards being sent out by the White House for a few administrations by the time the Reagans were in America's Home. In 1983, for example, 400 volunteers from the Office of Presidential Inquiry helped to hand-address every Christmas card envelope. The envelopes were written in black ink without abbreviating any streets or states. White House Christmas cards that were sent to past presidents, members of the Supreme Court, the Senate, and the House of Representatives were written by a professional calligrapher, Kathlyn Peake, whose work was considered an art form. There were also 7,500-holiday gift prints made of the selection by Mark Hampton, simply titled Green Room at the White House.

Like her predecessor Jackie Kennedy, Nancy Reagan figuratively opened the doors of the White House to the people with an NBC special that featured a tour of the decorated rooms led by Mrs. Reagan along with a history of White House Christmases.

Barack Obama (2009-2017)

President and Mrs. Barack Obama entered the White House with two young daughters and a lot of joyful energy as America looked on. During their first year in the executive mansion, the President and First Lady Michelle Obama's selection of their White House Christmas card caused some controversy in that there was no mention of the word "Christmas" anywhere on the front side or inside of their card. The front of the very stylish, cream-colored card, featuring a gold wreath surrounding a gold presidential coat of arms and containing a maroon border, said "Season's Greetings," with "2009" centered below. The inside verse offered good wishes to the Presidential Christmas cards' recipients: "May your family have a joyous holiday season and a new year blessed with hope and happiness."

The fact that there was no printing of a biblical passage (as was done during the George W. Bush tenure) nor an artist's depiction of decorations in one of the rooms in the White House (as was on the Clinton's cards) certainly brought out the critics. Representative Henry Brown, a Republican from South Carolina, even introduced a resolution for the defense of the sacredness of the Christmas holiday, saying, "I believe that sending a Christmas card without referencing a holiday and its purpose limits the Christmas celebration in favor of a more politically correct holiday." Over 40 Democrats and Republicans co-signed the bill.

A White House spokesperson indicated that certainly no slight was intended and that the Presidential family recognized that many Americans celebrate different holidays at the end of the year and at the beginning of the new year, and the Obamas' White House Christmas cards reflect that thought. The Obamas' cards hardly broke any new ground; George W. Bush's distributed White House Christmas cards did not mention "Christmas," either.

Certainly, there could not have been too many differences of opinion regarding the behavior or practices of events in which the First Family participated once the 2009 holiday season arrived. On November 27th, the day after Thanksgiving, Michelle Obama along with First Daughters Malia and Sasha accepted delivery of the 18½ foot Douglas fir tree which was to serve as the White House Christmas tree. The next day, Michelle and the girls were accompanied by the President, who together counted down to the moment when all four pressed the button that lit the National Christmas tree. President Obama joked, "I'm technologically challenged and I might not get this right."

The 2013 Barack Obama Christmas Card is a 3-D Pop-up design of the South Portico of the White House. In the foreground of the stark white diorama are the First Dogs, Bo and Sunny. The inscription, in gold lettering, reads, "As we gather around this season, may the warmth and joy of the holidays fill your home."

As Christmas Day drew closer, President Obama, interviewed by singer Gloria Estefan, explained that Santa would be entering the White House on Christmas Eve using the chimney in the Yellow Room, and that milk and cookies would be there for the red-suited man's consumption.

On December 22, the First Lady along with Malia and Sasha and the family dog, Bo, paid a Christmas visit to the Children's National Medical Center visiting heart and kidney patients. They were then led to the center's atrium area where Michelle Obama read 'Twas the Night Before Christmas to a larger group of children. Additionally, Malia and Sasha alternated reading from Snowmen at Night, a children's picture book.

On Christmas Eve, the family boarded Air Force One for their annual vacation in Hawaii, where Barack Obama was born in Honolulu on August 4, 1961.

Made from solid brass, finished in 24-karat gold, and screen printed with exquisite color, the Official 2024 White House Christmas Ornament honors President Jimmy Carter. The ornament's anchor shape, an iconic symbol of hope, represents Carter's service in the United States Navy. The design also highlights historic moments from his life and presidency.
